To-day is the ever memorable Fourth of July, poetically called the nation's birth-day. It is held in commemoration of the Declaraschleved our liberties. England had already felt the terror of our arms, but that did not phase her; but when she saw how we could write, she came down. Writing has been our national strong-suit ever since. This is why the press is called the palladium of our liberties. No nation has ever yet been able to stand before one of our President's annual messages. General Jackson brought France to time in double quick metre, on the French indemnity business, just by writing as strong as he could; and our diplomatists always write ocuments three or four times as long as those of any other government. This is what has made our power so much feared by other

The point in the Declaration of Independence that did the business was the principle which we then threw in the face of the aristocratic governments of the old world, that "all men are created equal," and have the inalienable right to liberty. This bold right. From that time Providence was on our side. Thenceforth this became the great American principle. It is the prin-ciple on which all our in-titutions are founded; it governs all our judicial decisions; and now it has become inaugurated in the Republican Platform. Our national greatness and prosperity are all due to this principle: therefore our people cherish and love to hear the defiant Declaration repeated on every auniversary of it.

It is the patriotic custom to honor the day with guns, great and small, fire crackers, squibs, processions, orations, toasts, whisky profuse persperation, and the other similarly painful enjoyments which go to make up the American idea of public festivity. The lives ffered up on the altar of our country in celebrating this Independence, already compare with those sacrificed in acquiring it. In th the number of the slain in battles of the Revolution will be an inconsiderate trifle compared with those offered up in celebrating it, showing what a perrennial fountain of patriotism liberty is:

In consequence of the sacred duty which devolves on every American citizen to celebrate this day with all his might, no DAILY Pages will be issued from this office tomorrow. The WEEKLY PRESS will appear on that day, as usual, and will be for sale at the Counting-room, single, or in any lish in another column, takes up the cudgel vigorously in defense of music, occasioned by a remark in the Catholic Telegraph, that 'music is the more dangerous of the fine arts; it can be made, more than poetry or sculpture, or painting, the obsequious bandmaid of the most lawless passions of the hu nan heart." We print the communication on account of its general remarks on art, not that there was anything in the remark of the Telegraph that, taken in its proper connection, required any refutation. The article was on school commencements, and, noticing the objections made to dramatic representations on the ground that they tend to foster a laste for theatricals that will lead to mi chief in after life, it inquired, why not object also, to learning to read, on the ground that it widened the sphere of temptation; and why not object, on the same ground, to carning music; and then it declared the objection as springing from a Pharasaical Puritanism, including the supposed objections in the same category.

As to the fact that music can be made the obsequious handmaid of the most lawless passions of the human heart, we do not per ceive that it is any serious charge against music, nor that our correspondent refutes it Poetry may also be made the obsequious handmaid, &c., yet no one proposes to abolish postry. No general law can be made to suppress indelicate books that would not include the Bible, and there are some parts of it, for instance the canticles of Solomon, that would not be tolerated in any modern work and which "may be made the obsequious hand their eyes for this, although a direct scriptural injunction may be found to that end.

Our correspondent admits that music may ouse men to deeds of bloodshed, is there rouse men to any worse passion than that for war and bloodshed? Music is regarded as a potent stimulus of this. The ancients pictured it as the most hateful of passions, and most dire in its effects. There is a tendency in modern times to take one of the most amiable of the ancient goddesses and make her the symbol of the worst) passions of the human heart;

Music is the chief incentive to dancing The question was seriously asked in the late Methodist General Conference, by delegates from this city, whether dancing should not be condemned as an exciting cause of violating the Seventh Commandment, Christian charity compels us to believe that this question was not wantonly raised, but that devout persons had found themselves subject to such influences from dancing. Let not the strong brethren despise the weak for this, but rather say, like Paul, if dancing causeth my brother thus to offend, be should dance no more while the world stands.

Every thing beautiful and desirable can be nade subservient to lawless passions. They who would avoid contact with any thing subject to abuse, should be put in a cast-iron cell as soon as possible, and under a regimen of daily flaggellation that would draw all the vital heat in them to the surface.

Great Moral Reform by the Queen The Queen of England has issued a proch mation, stating that she has, after serious consideration, resolved that it is her indis pensable duty to preserve and advance the honor of Almighty God, and to suppress al vice and immorality; wherefore she has made a resolution to "discountenance and punish all manner of vice, profaneness and immorality in all persons, of whatsoever, degree or quality." She says: "We do hereby require and command them, and every one of them appeal to fundamental trath knocked the decently and reverently to attend the wor ottom from John Bull. it placed this ship of God on every Lord's Day." She als country in an impregnable position of enjoins on all judges, magistrates and other public officers, that they take care to suppress all dissolute practices, "and likewise that they take effectual care to prevent all persons keeping tayerss, or other public houses whatsoever, from selling wine, beer or other liquors, or receiving or permitting guests to be or remain in such of their house in the time of Divine service on the Lord's Day."

> It is hoped that the Queen will begin this reform in the aristocracy and the Club-houses. Let the police clean them out every Sunday at Church time, and send the inmates to Church or to the watch-house; and let them stop all the carriages of the nobility in the public parks and take them to Church. When the has carried out this reform it will be quite soon enough to begin with the beerbouses of the laboring people.

The Catholic Telegraph on Music.

To the Eddors of the Daily Press:

The learned writer of an article on "School Commencements," which appeared in the Catholic Telegraph of last Saturday, speaks of music as being the most dangerous of the fine arts in its influence on the young. The assertion certainly has the merit of being novel, though we doubt whether it will tend to diminish the number of Euterpe's votaries. Painting, to give a general definition, is the art of imitating on canvas, by means of colors, any thing which the eye beholds; or of calling on the imagination for the description of scenes that live only in history and tradition; or for the invention of fancies. tion of scenes that live only in history and tradition; or for the invention of fancies. Sculpture may be defined with the same words. Poetry is the language of the imagi-nation of the heart. But what is music? Let us consult some standard theorists. "Harmony is a combi-nation of sounds pleasant to the ear, melody is a succession of sounds agreeable to the ear and making sense; the union of harmony and melody constitutes music." "Music is the language of the emotions." "Music is man's ideal of the language spoken in heaven." It is difficult to determine what music is; every writer who has defined this term has done so differently from his predecessors. To most persons it is a pleasurable excitement, or, a something which fills up the chinks of time, in the saloon where conversation has gone begging. To the true musician, to the tone-poet it is the language wherewith he discloses the subline sensations, the delights and sor-ws of his soul. ows of his soul.

The musician works with sounds, the painter with colors, the sculptor with clay, and the poet with words. The creations of the painter and sculptor appeal more directly to the understanding of the multitude than to the understanding of the multitude than the fabrics of words or sounds. The effect of their labor is palpable, A picture of the Graces or a statue of Venus never fail to awaken in their observer lawless passions. But music can not have a demoralizing influence, for the reason that it is not generally understood. There have been but few born musicinus, and, unless a man devote his lifetime to its study, he cannot comprehend this language, and even then he will be unable to to write with the same truthfulness as the true tone-poet. Spohr is an example of a made-musician. Mozart and Bethoven were born musicians. As to poetry, it can not deborn musicians. As to poetry, it can not de-scend so far from the Helicon as to become dangerous. There is no true poetry without

The question now is, in what shape can uusic, when administered to the young, be-ome hurtful? It is true, it may become subservient to words, (not poetry) and thus ex-presses baneful influence on morality, or rouse men to deeds of bloodshed; but then it is the slave of the words; it takes the part of maid of the most lawless passions of the human heart." But it is not pretended that the Bible is to be condemned therefor.

Painting and sculpture may certainly be made such a handmaid. This fact is plainly recognized in the Scriptures, the Jews being forbidden to make graven images or lifenesses of any thing, except those which were placed in the Ark of the Lord and in the Temple. This seems to have been forbidden them. This seemed to be their most lawless passion, except their peopensity to make alliances with the women of Moab. We are not aware that it is proposed to abolish painting and scalpture on account of its facilities for abuse.

It is argued by some that beauty may be made to the impure mind the obsequious handmaid to the most lawless passions. Some are so material as to argue that because beauty excites love, love is but the obsequious handmaid of the passions. If love is not passion, they argue, why should beauty of person excite it so much more than beauty of character? Place the two is competition, they say, and which will win? The objection which the Telegraph meets will apply to music and to every thing beautiful or pleasing, and that, we understand, is the tenor of the article.

The eyn is undoubtedly the chief handmaid to the most lawless passions, but there of losing their mosts. There are no Syrens now-a-days, and no persons foolish enough to believe them ever to have existed.

And though posts have sing of the bewitching and ruining strains of Lare-Ley, there exists not in the memory of man a proof of her powers, and her song no longer altures the gondoier of the Rhine. An old English post says: "Who loveth not music he loveth not his God," and St. Justin, the martyr, says: "Music awakens in the heart the desire to do good, dispels carnel passions, inspires with lofty thoughts, and calms sed-consoles the pious souls when weary of life."

This is to certify that I have used the Rollers manufactured by Mr. Geo. Hall, and find them subsets and more economical than those manufactured from the ordinary materials.

"HOS. WINTER, Presenting. Clincinnati Daily Press Office.

I cheerfully recommend the Rollers made by Mr. Geo. Hall, believing those to be more durable than any others I have seen or heart of. I shall be happy to show any person a pair mannfactured by him, which I have in constant up.
